Microsoft wants to dominate the ad industry and is already building its own game. From Sims to Azteca Zoo, ads in the shape of favorite games are becoming ever more prevalent in web, mobile, and TV ads The classic Defender may not be the most modern piece of software on the market, but that isn't stopping it from becoming one of the most popular games on Steam 2020 has been a big year for ads, but they've been a long time coming. They may have come to the fore in the wake of the Web 2.0 boom, but as technology advanced, ads have come to rule the Internet. For example, is the mobile phone really so much different? . The BBC has a sleek new PlayStation 4 ad, Microsoft is trying to build its own game, and the classic Defender is about to get a new entry on Steam as an Early Access release and I would like to share this with you. I would like to present you with a few pictures which I found on the Internet. Some were taken from the store of the company Alien Shock, others were taken from the website of the company V-RAGE. For this purpose, I have to warn you that I do not own any rights to these pictures. The copyright of these pictures belongs to their respective owners. So, feel free to take away any of these pictures if you are confronted with a complaint. But first, I think I should introduce myself. I am a member of the German bulletin board called board.de. Their motto is: "The Internet is for users". It is a free, community-based bulletin board and has around 100.000 members. I first learned about this famous Web 2.0 type program in the year 2000 with my Web 2.0 browser on the old Opera and I have been an active user of it ever since. The program has a unique look and feels and gets something that I like to call "Web 2.0 feel". It still lives, it has a life of its own and it has remained interesting for many others too. About a year ago, the server of this program stopped and I myself was then the first who came up with a solution to this problem. He wrote the program darsteller. That's the program I mentioned a few sentences ago. It is a program that is being developed in the framework of the "Open Source" movement and is released to the public for free. It is developed by the company Alien Shock and I am one of the developers of this program
